

William is an associate in the St. John's office of Cox & Palmer who has an active mining practice representing numerous mining entities. William is a graduate of Memorial University of Newfoundland and Labrador (BA 2004) and Dalhousie University (LL.B. 2007). In 2012, William completed a Certificate in Mining Law from Osgoode Hall Law School.

William's experience includes the acquisition, disposition and restructuring of mining companies including corporate and environmental due diligence; the purchase and sale of specific mining assets including mining leases, mineral licences and royalty interests including corporate and title opinions with respect to same; project financing including drafting relevant security documents and flow-through share offerings; negotiating and drafting various agreements including royalty agreements, purchase agreements, assignment agreements, option agreements and joint venture agreements; securities matters particular to junior mining companies; dealing with local communities and indigenous peoples; and mining taxation.

In addition to his legal practice, William is an active community volunteer and he currently serves as honorary legal counsel and a director of St. John Ambulance, Newfoundland and Labrador Council. William is also holds private pilot license and is an officer in the CIC, a branch of the Canadian Armed Forces Reserves.